Court ruling

SJC: Unburnt pot smell not enough for cops to search

The state's highest court ruled on Wednesday that police officers cannot perform a warrantless search of a car based solely on the smell of marijuana.

"[W]e hold that such odor, standing alone, does not provide probable cause to search an automobile," the ruling by the Supreme Judicial Court said.

The ruling comes from a case that sought to clarify a 2011 ruling by the court that said because of the decriminalization of an ounce of pot, the odor of burnt marijuana alone cannot reasonably provide suspicion of criminal activity. METRO

Lawyer: Injured bar patron wants answers

Brighton bar. The DA's office said staff at Roggie's dumped an unconscious and severely injured man outside the bar.

The owner of a popular Brighton bar pleaded not guilty on Wednesday to charges related to an alleged incident at his bar in which staff carried an unconscious and severely injured patron outside, leaving him there.

John Rogaris, 44, of New York, was arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court on charges of destruction of evidence, witness intimidation and lying to authorities. He was indicted by a grand jury last week.

Police responded to the area behind Roggie's on Chestnut Hill Avenue at about 2 a.m. on May 23 for a report of an unconscious man in his 20s. When officers arrived they found Dylan Fitzgibbon suffering from life-threatening injuries and believed he had been assaulted.

However, during the course of their investigation, authorities determined that the man suffered the life-threatening injury while inside the bar and was then carried outside. Boston police said detectives learned the information through witness interviews and video surveillance from inside Roggie's.

A prosecutor said an employee found Fitzgibbon, who authorities said was underage at the time, unconscious at the bottom of the stairs. The manager then called Rogaris, who allegedly told the manager to

Seeking answers

As Rogaris waited for his case to be called, the man who was found unconscious inside his bar and was allegedly carried and left outside sat one row behind him. Dylan Fitzgibbon, 21, a University College Cork student who was in Boston for an internship, now must wear a helmet to protect his head after suffering significant head and brain injuries.

- "We're here because we want to have the answers," said Bill Dailey, Fitzgibbon's attorney. "How can a person do this to another person and essentially just leave them to die? And we want that question answered."

move Fitzgibbon from the bottom of the stairs to the back parking lot and call 911. However, a prosecutor said none of the staff called emergency crews and a passerby who spotted Fitzgibbon outside called 911.

Rogaris allegedly told detectives the bar's video surveillance system was shorting out, but after police applied for a warrant, video showed Rogaris manipulating wires behind the bar's video recording system, a prosecutor said. Additionally, authorities allege Rogaris visited a witness and said he would take care of him financially if he took the fall for him.

The prosecutor did not request Rogaris be held on bail and Rogaris was released on his own recognizance. Rogaris' lawyer said his client has a spotless record and he looks forward to defending him in court.

A spokesman for the Suffolk district attorney's office said no one else is expected to be charged.

T cop in hot water over Facebook post

The MBTA has removed a Transit Police officer from his position as a police academy drill instructor after he posted a derogatory status update on his personal Facebook page.

Officer Joe Rossi reportedly posted: "Farther's [sic] Day, the most confusing day in Roxbury," referring to one of Boston's predominantly black neighborhoods.

Post carefully

TPD's social media policy prohibits officers from posting comments that are racist or sexist, or insult groups based on national origin.

- Those types of comments "tend to undermine the public trust and confidence required by you," the policy states.

- Officers can't post anything that "reflects a lack of good moral character" or "would bring unfavorable criticism or embarrassment" upon the department.

Boston NAACP President Michael Curry told WCVB the remark was "a sad commentary on what this gentleman thinks is going on in communities of color."

The transit agency said that in addition to being disciplined, Rossi "will be re-trained on the importance of treating people and communities with dignity and respect."

The T also said they were looking into whether any other officers commented on the post, or "liked" it.

The TPD's social media policy states employees must "be mindful of the negative impact of inappropriate or unauthorized postings upon the ... Department and its relationship with the public."

Saugus cops seek help in cold case

Saugus police are renewing their call for help to identify the driver of a car in a fatal hit-and-run incident that left a Lynn woman dead.

Kathleen O'Neil would have turned 45 this month. On June 19, 2011, the Lynn resident was walking along Route 107 northbound, also known as the Saugus Turnpike, when police believe she was hit by a car before 1 a.m. and left badly injured in the median of the roadway.

Police said they have no strong leads in the case and that it has gone cold.

"Someone knows what happened that day, and we need them to come forward," Saugus Police Lt. Ronald Giorgetti said in a statement.

Philip Chism indicted for attack on Youth Services staffer

A teen accused of raping and murdering his Danvers High School teacher has been indicted for allegedly trying to kill a female Department of Youth Services worker while in custody.

Philip Chism, 15, of Danvers, was indicted by a grand jury on charges including attempted murder by strangulation and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, the Suffolk district attorney's office said Wednesday.

Chism allegedly followed the 29-year-old female staffer into the bathroom last month and assaulted her. Co-workers heard the woman's cries and helped her.

In 2013, when he was 14, Chism allegedly killed 24-year-old math teacher Colleen Ritzer of Andover and disposed of her body behind the school. He has pleaded not guilty. METRO

Hernandez attorneys want Patriots records

Former New England Patriot Aaron Hernandez is escorted into Attleboro District Court to face charges of murder in June 2013.

State of mind.

Defense lawyers claim the team has ignored their numerous requests for medical and psychological tests.

Lawyers for ex-NFL star and murder suspect Aaron Hernandez on Wednesday asked a Bristol County Judge to force the New England Patriots to turn over his medical and pre-draft scouting records.

The records relate to Hernandez's psychological testing, his attorneys said, and include information on MRIs and CT scans, as well as drug and alcohol abuse.

Hernandez has pleaded not guilty to the fatal shootings of

Boarding Hernandez in Boston

Following Wednesday's hearing, Hernandez was transferred from the Bristol County House of Correction in North Dartmouth, where he has been for over a year, to the Suffolk County Jail on Nashua Street.

Hernandez's attorneys made the request Monday, arguing that they needed better access to their client.

A Bristol County Judge granted the request, but said Hernandez will be moved back to the Dartmouth jail when he begins trial in the Lloyd case this fall.

Odin Lloyd in 2013, and Safiro Furtado and Daniel Abreu in 2012, and is currently awaiting trial.

His attorneys said they heard nothing from the Patriots after asking the team multiple times for the records, which they claim are crucial to their defense as it show their client's state of mind before carrying out his alleged crimes.

The Patriots dropped Hernandez in June 2013, hours after he was charged with the shooting death of Lloyd.

The issue will again be addressed at a hearing on July 22.

Roomie. Tsarnaev called 9/11 attacks a conspiracy

The UMass Dartmouth student accused of killing three people and injuring 264 more in twin blasts at the 2013 Boston Marathon once described the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks as a false flag, his college roommate testified in federal court on Wednesday.

Andrew Dwinells took the witness stand for a second day of testimony at the trial of Azamat Tazhayakov, a college friend of bombing suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. Tazhayakov has been charged with obstructing the investigation into the terror attack.

Visit Metro.us to read additional witness testimony in Tazhayakov's trial.

Dwinells said he remembers Tsarnaev watching a documentary about the Sept. 11 attacks and saying he believed they were a result of a conspiracy carried out by the U.S. government. He also testified that Tsarnaev showed no signs of extremist views.

Tazhayakov has pleaded not guilty to the charge that he helped dispose of a backpack containing empty fireworks that was removed, along with a laptop and other items, from Tsarnaev's dorm.

On Tuesday, Dwinells testified that on April 18, 2014 he let three men, who prosecutors have identified as Tazhayakov, Dias Kadyrbayev and Robel Phillippos, into the dorm he shared with Tsarnaev to retrieve the alleged terrorist's belongings.

Dwinells said his roommate acted normally in the wake of the bombings—spending much of his time sleeping, texting and going on his computer. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Gun control

Gun bill clears House, but time a factor for law

The House on Wednesday advanced a bill aimed at reducing gun violence on a 111-37 vote.

Time is a factor for gun bill advocates as formal sessions are due to end on July 31 and any gun bill would need to first clear the Senate and then be reconciled with the House bill to reach Gov. Deval Patrick. The time frame is a compressed one for major legislation.

The revised bill, according to a summary, would require the state to fully comply with a national instant background check system, and would authorize licensed gun dealers to access criminal histories prior to making a sale.

The bill also retains controversial provisions that would give the licensing authority, such as a local police chief, broader discretion to deny a firearm ID card or license to carry. SHNS / METRO

Ex-New Orleans Mayor gets 10 years in prison

Crime. He was found guilty of bribery, wire fraud, conspiracy, money laundering and tax evasion.

Former New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin was sentenced on Wednesday to 10 years in federal prison for corruption during the critical years of rebuilding after Hurricane Katrina devastated the city in 2005.

Nagin, 58, stirred national controversy with his erratic behavior after Katrina breached floodwalls and inundated New Orleans in 2005, killing at least 1,500 people.

Citing Nagin's devotion to his family and commitment to helping New Orleans, U.S. District Judge Helen Ginger Berrigan said a shorter prison term than that recommended under federal sentencing guidelines was warranted.

She ordered Nagin to turn himself in to begin serving his sentence no later than Sept. 8. With good behavior, and barring any appeals, Nagin could get out of prison after eight or nine years.

Thousands of people on the East Coast woke up to power outages and a major clean-up operation on Wednesday after severe storms and high winds killed five people.

One of the hardest-hit spots was the Syracuse-area community of Smithfield, New York, where four of the deaths were reported and at least four homes destroyed on Tuesday, Madison County Undersheriff John Ball said in a statement.

The storms uprooted trees and tore down power lines across several counties in cen-

THE PRESIDENT'S MISSED CHANCE

The optics probably sounded great in the cloistered confines of the White House. "Hey, Mr. President, your approval ratings are a wreck, you can't even move a pizza delivery through Congress and the Supreme Court is smacking your policies down like beach volleyballs. You know what you need? A road trip!"

Good idea: Connect with folks, snag some charming photo ops and show how concerned you are about regular people.

But that was before a guy in Denver offered him a joint, before another shook his hand wearing a latex horse mask and before the president spent the evening playing pool with a friendly governor, all while a humanitarian crisis was erupting on the nation's southern border.

The traffic jam of children being detained there and facing wildly uncertain fates after entering the country illegally has prompted deep concern among Democrats and Republicans alike.

The president, of course, says Congress has failed to grapple with comprehensive immigration reform and may well bear some blame.

Opinion

POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT FOR CNN

CNN = POLITICS

Fair enough. But even some members of his own party spent the early part of the week quietly grouching that sometimes it's not enough to blame the other side, especially when innocent children are involved.

Sure, the president asked for money for the crisis, but the presidency is also about symbolism. And it clearly made some Democrats uncomfortable for Mr. Obama to be seemingly partying it up, heading to fund-raisers in Texas and yet steering away from a visit to the very place where they thought he was needed.

By the time you read this, maybe the White House will have recalculated and rerouted Mr. Obama to the border to see the calamity for himself.

But it looks like his team's first instinct was cold and clear: Keep him away from the problem physically, and that it will keep him from being connected to it politically.

That early decision may well haunt him even if he takes corrective measures now. Because while standing too close to trouble can indeed be risky, so can standing too far away.

Missing. Mont Blanc mountain climber found after 32 years in ice

Mountain climbers have made a grisly discovery in the Mont Blanc range of the Alps — the body of a young climber preserved in ice for 32 years.

The body of Patrice Hyvert, who had been training to be a guide, was found last Thursday by two mountain climbers, according to local newspaper Dauphine Libere.

Hyvert was last seen alive on March 1, 1982, when at age 23, he took off on a solitary climb up the "Aiguille Verte" mountain, part of the Mont Blanc massif that straddles the French-Italian border, before bad weather set in the afternoon.

Another climber was evacuated from the same mountain two days later, but

Mont Blanc / WIKIPEDIA

Hyvert was never found.

Local police confirmed to newspapers that the frozen body was that of the missing climber, finding his identity card still in his wallet.

The discovery came as a shock to Hyvert's 82-year-old father, Gerard.

"I'm a mountain man, and I would have preferred him to stay up there," he told RTL radio. "He was better on a mountain than in a coffin. He was in his element." REUTERS

Going just 'a hair off' with Crazy Eyes

Acting style. Uzo Aduba shares the secrets to becoming Suzanne.

After a first season where she awkwardly pursued main character Piper, Crazy Eyes (Uzo Aduba), or Suzanne, as she prefers to be called, took a darker turn in Season 2 of "Orange Is the New Black." Pulled into the villainous Vee's (Lorraine Toussaint) group of contraband dealers, she showed a new menacing side.

Asked if she thinks Suzanne went too far, Aduba says, "I don't know if you can go too far. Jenji [Kohan, the series creator] had said it felt like summer camp a little bit. She wanted to really bring the reality of the world [into Season 2]."

Season 2 of "Orange Is the New Black" is available on Netflix now. / K.C. BAILEY FOR NETFLIX

Suzanne occupies an unusual place in the hierarchy of Litchfield, the show's fictional prison. While many inmates suffer from mental illness, it's Suzanne who most shows this side at first glance. But she never becomes a caricature.

"I was less interested in the 'playing' of the crazy. It's never interesting to me when someone plays at something," says Aduba. "It's just, 'be it,' and whatever comes out of it, comes out of it."

One tactic? Doing everything just "a hair off," as Aduba says. When Suzanne tries to do something playful, like wink,

"it just never lands the way it's supposed to."

Aduba decided another of Suzanne's characteristics would be an intense focus on the person she was talking to. Alex (Laura Prepon) was the recipient of some of that focus. Laughing, Aduba says, "That felt weird to do. I'm sure it felt weird for Laura to receive."

Suzanne's famous hairstyle changed in Season 2. But when asked to dish on whether it would change again in the third season, Aduba invokes the show's dreaded solitary confinement units: "I'm not going to SHU over that."

Diversity

Actor and advocate?

The show's success has only doubled its commitment to telling the stories of minorities. It's something the cast takes pride in, but it also places a great deal of responsibility on them. "As an Afro-Latina woman, I feel even more responsibility. I'm in this show that's entertaining, but at the same time, it's starting all these wonderful conversations about different types of people and different situations," says Selenis Leyva, who portrays kitchen boss Gloria.

Laverne Cox, who made the cover of Time magazine for her advocacy work, adds "I'm feeling the responsibility ... in a really intense way."

She understands the attention, but says, "There's so many amazing trans folks out there doing amazing work and they need attention, too."

Quoted

Come on, you're already humming along to the music, aren't you? / ALASTAIR MUIR

'Phantom' sets the stage on fire (literally)

Relaunch. A revived and revitalized production of the hit musical shows off some stage magic.

The re-imagined production of "The Phantom of the Opera" currently making its North American premiere at the Opera House is, in a word, magnificent. The sheer spectacle of the behemoth musical is reason enough to see it, even if you've seen it before.

Though the plot remains largely intact, the staging, choreography and scenic design have undergone an overhaul that makes "Phantom" feel fresh and new. They've injected some humor (though it takes a while for the audience to feel comfortable laughing), created a stunning set with a pretty impressive staircase and employed special effects that'll make even the most cynical "Phantom" detractor sit up and take note.

Thanks to some extraordinary pyrotechnics, the Phantom (Cooper Grodin) feels far more demonic and menacing than his predecessors. Flames fly so freely and with such seeming spontaneity you'll find yourself scoping out the emergency exits more than once.

When the legendary chandelier comes crashing down, it feels so real that you might think you've actually been zapped by an errant electrical current. You haven't, but you might get hit with some of the shards of glass (plastic, actually) that make it feel even more authentic.

Despite all the smoke and special effects, the real star of "Phantom" is still its glorious score. With songs such as "Think of Me," "The Music of the Night" and "All I Ask of You," expect to be singing (at least in your head) for days.

Julia Udine delivers a stellar turn as Christine, while Grodin nicely transitions the Phantom from mysterious stranger into madcap monster with a haunting subtext of vulnerability and pain.

Would you trust your kid with Courtney Love?

You know what your television needs more of? Courtney Love. The singer and lovable crazy-pants will be guest-starring on the next season of "Sons of Anarchy," according to TVLine, playing a preschool teacher. I mean, it's not like Love is a novice actor or anything, since she's done all right for herself in movies like "The People vs. Larry Flynt," "Man on the Moon" and "Sid and Nancy." Oh, and "200 Cigarettes," if anyone remembers that flick. But a preschool teacher? All right, if you insist, "Sons of Anarchy." The seventh and final season of the show will also feature Marilyn Manson, so clearly they're working on a theme here. Maybe he'll play a librarian.

Clooney says Daily Mail crossed the line

George Clooney is mad at the Daily Mail over a story they printed earlier this week about his fiancée, Amal Alamuddin — and he's speaking out. "I seldom respond to tabloids, unless it involves someone else and their safety or well-being. The Daily Mail has printed a completely fabricated story about my fiancée's mother opposing our marriage for religious reasons," Clooney writes in a statement to USA Today. "It says Amal's mother has been telling 'half of Beirut' that she's against the wedding. It says they joke about traditions in the Druze religion that end up with the death of the bride. Let me repeat that: the death of the bride. None of the story is factually true. Amal's mother is not Druze. She has not been to Beirut since Amal and I have been dating, and she is in no way against the marriage. The irresponsibility, in this day and age, to exploit religious differences where none exist, is at the very least negligent and more appropriately dangerous. We have family members all over the world, and the idea that someone would inflame any part of that world for the sole reason of selling papers should be criminal. ... When they put my family and my friends in harm's way, they cross far beyond just a laughable tabloid and into the arena of inciting violence. They must be so very proud." After Clooney's blistering article and the scores of scathing blog posts that followed, the British tabloid ended up taking down the story entirely and says the it has "launched a full investigation" into how the error was made."

Kirsten Dunst pisses off the Internet

Kirsten Dunst can't believe anyone would think she's not a feminist just because she spent some of her recent Harper's Bazaar interview espousing the importance of traditional gender roles. Can't a girl just say things like "We all have to get our own jobs and make our own money, but staying at home, nurturing, being the mother, cooking — it's a valuable thing my mom created" or "You need a man to be a man and a woman to be a woman, that's why relationships work" without getting yelled at by the Internet? Luckily, Dunst has no shortage of magazine interviews in which to try to hone her message. In the latest issue of Flaunt, for example, she strikes back at the uproar: "I was talking about my mother — obviously I'm a feminist." Well, that clears things up.

Talking point

Efron and Rodriguez have been at it for years

While the general public might have been a bit caught off guard by photos of Zac Efron and Michelle Rodriguez packing on the PDA in Sardinia this week, apparently intimate activities are nothing new for the pair, who've known each other for about two years and have a history of hooking up, according to E! News. "Michelle is super-cool and laid-back and Zac has always been attracted to her because of that. ... She just gets on with all kinds of people and doesn't take the fame thing too seriously," a source says. "Zac ... can relate to her. He is attracted to her great attitude. They understand one another."

Products they swear by

- 1 Rami Gafni: The Perfect Brow Wand is a highlighter that works for every skin tone and hair color.
- 2 Rami Gafni: The Rami Tweezers by Tweezerman has a rounded tip, so it doesn't hurt the delicate skin around the eye area while tweezing.
- 3 Malynda Vigliotti: I recommend Brow Job, for people who have over tweezed their brows. It helps grow them in.

Tweezing versus waxing. Experts go brow to brow in the great beauty debate

Trusting a complete stranger with the main focal point of your face can be pretty scary, especially now since brows are having a moment. Some are hesitant to go to an eyebrow waxer in fear that their shape will be ruined in all of 10 seconds. Others swear by it, saying tweezing just doesn't give you the same look. We took this debate to two experts, Boom Boom Brow Bar owner Malynda Vigliotti and Rami Gafni, who has tweezed the brows of celebrities such as Naomi Campbell and Claire Danes to perfection. He also teamed up with Look Boutiques on June 13 to host Eyebrow Intervention Day in NYC. EMILY LAURENCE

Tweezing

Rami Gafni

What method do you prefer?
I'm in favor of tweezing. You can literally take out one hair at a time, so it's very succinct. With waxing, you can ruin the entire line of the brow or take out a chunk of the brow unintentionally.

How much upkeep does your method require?
For most people, once a month is ideal and you don't have to do touch-ups between appointments.

How can someone create the right brow shape for their face?
Follow your bone structure; where the brow bone sticks out the most, the arch should peak. I tell people to only tweeze obvious strays. Plucking is like eating potato chips, you can't stop at just one!

Waxing

Malynda Vigliotti

What method do you prefer?
I love waxing because you get all the baby fine hairs out and that is really helpful in creating a beautiful, thin line.

How much upkeep does your method require?
Once a month is best, and I tell clients to do nothing between appointments.

How can someone create the right brow shape for their face?
The first step is to identify where the brows should start, where the arch should go and where the brow should end. Then you adapt accordingly. If someone has a round face, they should have more of an arched brow. You have to work with what you have.

Braids to beat the heat

City humidity doesn't mean you have to spend summer in ponytails and messy buns. DreamDry senior stylist Faith Huffnagle shares with us three beautiful braided styles that not only look awesome, but will keep you cool. Bonus: All three styles are easier to do when your hair is a little dirty, so go ahead and hit snooze.

EMILY LAURENCE

Beginner braider

The Braid

This fishtail braid looks elaborate, but it seriously only takes five minutes to do. Part your hair and divide it into two sections. Huffnagle recommends a side part so your braid will land over your shoulder. Take a small part of the outer section of one of the two sections you divided your hair into and cross it over, adding it to the inside of the other hair section. Then, do the exact same thing with the other side. Secure the end with an elastic. Pro tip: "The smaller the sections are that you pull from the two bigger sections, the more delicate the braid will look," Huffnagle says.

Expert braider

The Bianca

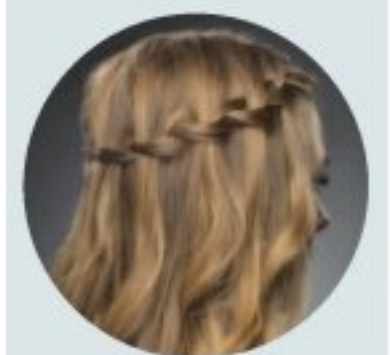

This crown braid has a bohemian look, making it perfect for summer. Start by grabbing a 4-inch section of hair behind your ear. Then, divide that section in to three equal parts, like you would to start a normal braid. What makes this outside braid different from a normal braid is that you are constantly moving the center section, pulling it over both ways. The front piece ends up joining the back piece, very similarly to a French braid. Keep going around your head by pulling more hair from the top all the way around. As you braid, make sure it's tight; you can pull it apart a little at the end to loosen it. Once you get all the way around your head, finish braiding any extra hair, secure it with an elastic and pin it behind your ear or in the back. Pull the braid apart a bit to make it look more relaxed.

Intermediate braider

The Juliette

The Juliette is perfect if you are going out to drinks. Start by sectioning the top third part of your hair and dividing it into three sections. Start a regular braid, but after the first pull, drop one of the section parts and weave a new section part in with the other two. You will be adding to the two original sections all the way around your head, dropping one section with each pull, creating the cascading waterfall look. "If a layer ends, just connect it to another piece of hair and continue, Huffnagle advises.

5 Ways that marriage can bring out your worst

Marriage is the legal, religious and/or spiritual joining of two people. Typically, these two people are driven by love, romance and desire to be together. But love is the easy part; cohabitation and long-term relationships offer more challenges. The longer you are with someone, the more you learn about them — what makes them tick and what gets under their skin — as well as yourself. And sometimes, things can go sideways and even downright sour. Here are the top ways that marriage can actually make things worse for you and for your significant other.

You let go of friendships

People believe that once you're married, you need to let go of past relationships, but that's not healthy. By sacrificing friends, you limit your exposure to people who have indirectly helped guide your thoughts. This can end up limiting your personal growth and stagnate your relationship.

You fight dirty

If you know the little things about them, you hold a lot of power in an argument. In relationship terms, it's called "going for the jugular" — meaning you say or

Up: USA's "Satisfaction": I just participated in a panel for the advance screening of summer's hottest TV show and talked about marriage, monogamy and infidelity.

Down: Phone addiction: It's summer! Put down that phone and enjoy the world around you instead.

do the precise thing that is the ultimate insult and thus "win" the fight. But the aftermath is often worse than the fight itself.

You withhold sex/love/emotional support: When dating, passion and love are free-flowing. But after marriage and a few years of real and/or imagined slights, resentment can build, resulting in lots of "I'm not in the mood" or "Well, I guess you need to work that out" statements to your significant other. Abandoning your partner's physical or emotional needs establishes bad habits of non-communication.

You let yourself go

As couples exit courtship, sometimes they don't feel the need to maintain their physical appearance. This sends a direct message to your partner that you don't value them, and you don't value yourself.

You stop going the extra mile for your spouse

When first dating, we have our hearts invested in the little things: texts during the day, love notes in lipstick, flowers. Sometimes in marriage, comfort creeps in, spontaneity and romance wane, and the little things get left behind as "unimportant." In truth, it's the little things that count.

Awareness is key to stopping these damaging cycles

The bottom line: Saying "I love you" is one thing, but actions speak volumes, and it's what your partner does need to back up his or her words. Stay connected, don't get comfortable and keep putting effort into your actions.

What we're into this week

1 What does it really mean to "let go"?

2 How do you keep a long-distance relationship great?

Love-challenged? Tell me your story and email thelovepros@gmail.com for a chance to be on TV.

Low-fidelity legends.

Guided By Voices are putting out music at a feverish clip, and not feuding quite as much as a recent Funny or Die video might have you believe.

In the new Guided by Voices video for "Bad Love Is Easy To Do," on the Funny or Die website, comedians Rob Corddry and Brian Huskey play a feuding version of the band's chief songwriters, Robert Pollard and Tobin Sprout, respectively. They look like a gentle 1960s folk duo modeled after Simon & Garfunkel and they fight like brothers. The song is a burst of saccharine guitar pop worthy of the term "classic lineup" that is being used to describe the GBV that reformed in 2010. Since reforming, the band has been recording at a prolific clip that rivals their peak years in the first incarnation, releasing six full-length albums and a whole bunch of singles and EPs in four years. So really, then, how are band relations? "Things are going well," insists Sprout, "We'll just go with that."

It was just about 10 years ago that Bob announced with "Half Smiles of the Decomposed" that it was to be the last GBV album. Happily, he broke that promise, and when GBV reformed you were back in the fold. Do you think there is an endpoint to

Quoted

"We are also seeing younger fans at the shows, like 6 years old to 12 and 14, singing all the words! It's really something to see that; moms and dads holding their kids, singing together." Sprout

Guided by Voices?

There is no endpoint now. We're working on the next GBV album. We plan to record in the fall. I also have a solo coming out called "The Universe And Me." ... We are also seeing younger fans at the shows, like 6 years old to 12 and 14, singing all the words!

Guided By Voices are pictured here chilling out. / PROVIDED

It's really something to see that; moms and dads holding their kids, singing together.

Did you ever go to GBV shows as a spectator during the years that you weren't in the band?

I saw pretty much every lineup. Mostly would see them when they played Grand Rapids.

When you did come back to GBV, what was the moment when you knew that it was the right thing to do?

I think it was the right thing to do when I left the band in '96 to be home with my family. It was hard to see GBV go on

Guided by the numbers

The most powerful visual for Pollard's songwriting I've ever heard is that line about a suitcase full of songs, with more than 1,000 songs in it. Have you ever seen the suitcase?

I saw it a long time ago, pre-CDs, some were even on small reel-to-reel. I remember Bob had a recorder he borrowed from his school, it sounded really good. One mic, one track.

While we're talking numbers, how many beers would you estimate that GBV has drank onstage over the years?

I have no idea! Too many to count.

Has this number decreased as the years have gone on? I would say yes, quite a bit.

One more numbers question: How many "The Club is Open" stage prop neon signs are there or have there been?

I believe just one. It's been broken and fixed a few times though. Butterfingers.

Going solo. Hamilton Leithauser walks away from The Walkmen and emerges with 'Black Hours'

Hamilton Leithauser plays The Sinclair (52 Church St., Cambridge) on Thursday. For tickets, visit www.sinclaircambridge.com. / LAUREN DUKOFF

Though many lyrics on Hamilton Leithauser's solo debut are worthy of a title like "Black Hours," the singer promises that none of the darkness is related to the "extreme hiatus" that his band, The Walkmen, made public last year.

"It would be easy to read into that," he says. "I mean, I wrote a song like, 'I Don't Need Anyone,' but that's supposed to be a love song. I can see how that would easily translate into that story, but that's not where it comes from."

The music is a logical extension of where The Walkmen were headed with their final album, but it's willfully less accessible. The album begins with a voice against a stark piano and dramatic string section, an arrangement evoking a '40s crooner, albeit with a more cynical sneer. "Do you wonder why I sing these love songs when I have no love at all?" he sings on opener, "5 AM."

"5 AM" was the first thing I did and it's when I really realized I didn't want to just play rock 'n' roll," he says.

But as Leithauser headed further in this direction, he was contacted by Vampire Weekend maestro Rostam Batmanglij about a collaboration.

"Rostam and I started working together and he wanted to do rock 'n' roll," says Leithauser. "I didn't know if I wanted to, but all of the sudden it was fun to do rock 'n' roll again."

PAT HEALY

A Walkmen-free set

Carrying on

Though fellow Walkmen Paul Maroon will share the stage, don't expect any Walkmen songs in the set: "That would be arrogant to claim that as mine," says Leithauser. "That would be like, 'I'm The Walkmen carrying on,' and that is not the case."

Smoke out booze problems instead

I don't hear anyone debating how much alcohol I can buy at a liquor store. Seems like pure ignorance that people think they can use the law to control how I spend my money, let alone what I do in my house. Ignorance must be bliss for those people, because they're forgetting that our country was founded upon leaving another for the separation of church and state. It's not like our country is making a religion out of alcohol — it's not like we can't get drunken drivers off the streets — no, we need to get pot smokers out of their homes! You people are ridiculous — you don't understand politics if you think that this is a real political issue. ALEX SNEIRSON, VIA EMAIL

Instead of hammering smokers, how about taxing drinkers? Increase the tax on beer, wine and hard liquor. Smokers are treated like lepers, while drinkers enjoy no such treatment. PAT DOUGHERTY, VIA EMAIL

Tell Congress to get priorities straight

Months before Election Day and after an alleged private early June meeting with the Bilderberg Group, Obama made the following frightening proclamation: "We cannot continue to rely only on our military in order to achieve the national security objectives that we've set. We've gotta have a civilian national security force that's just as powerful, just as strong, just as well-funded." Seeing how our government has home-schoolers, people with gardens and stored food, veterans, gun owners and Christians on a "watch list," I demand to know who "we" is and what were those goals? Hopefully your readers will take a break from what they are doing and ask their members of Congress to man up and demand to know who shaped these objectives.

Argentina to face off with Germany

World Cup. Superstar Lionel Messi will go for the World Cup trophy.

Lionel Messi and Argentina booked a ticket to Sunday's World Cup final with a win in penalty kicks on Thursday. Argentina and Netherlands battled to a scoreless tie through 120 minutes before settling things, 4-2, on penalties.

Defender Ron Vlaar took the first penalty for the Dutch and was turned away. After Arjen Robben scored, Wesley Sneijder was stuffed and the Argentines cruised.

Germany hasn't won a Cup since 1974, while Argentina last won in 1986.

Celtics add Zeller, Thornton, picks in three-way deal

The Cavaliers are looking to clear cap space for a run at LeBron James, and the Celtics turned out to be beneficiaries.

The Cavs, Nets and Celtics have agreed to a three-team deal, though it cannot be made official until Thursday when the free-agent signing period begins.

The Celtics will receive center Tyler Zeller and a first-round draft pick from Cleveland and guard Marcus Thornton from the Nets. The 2016 first-round pick is top-10 protected in 2016, 2017 and 2018. Starting with 2019 it would not be protected.

The Nets add point guard Jarrett Jack and forward Sergey Karasev from Cleveland, while the Cavs will receive European prospects Edin Bavcic, Christian Drejer and Ilkan Karaman.

More importantly for Cleveland, it will free up cap space in order to pursue free agents, most notably James.

Zeller was the No. 17 overall pick in 2012 out of UNC. Thornton, a five-year veteran, averaged 12.3 points per game for the Nets last season.

Players Red Sox may seek to trade

The Red Sox sit in a place they haven't been at the trade deadline since 1997.

At 39-51 entering Thursday night's game, they could be sellers in this year's trade market. Even two years ago, when they finished with a disastrous 69 wins, they were two games over .500 on July 31 and ostensibly still in the wild-card hunt.

The Sox were six games under .500 at the trade deadline in 1997 and pulled off one of the more notably lopsided deals in MLB history. They dealt veteran reliever Heathcliff Slocumb to Seattle for little-known pitcher Derek Lowe and catcher Jason Varitek.

Slocumb was 0-4 with a 4.13 ERA and 10 saves for the Mariners. Varitek and Lowe became icons in Boston and cornerstones of the 2004 World Series team.

So if the Sox choose to go the same route as 1997 and sell off some players, who are mostly likely to be dealt?

MARK OSBORNE
@MetroNYSports
mark.osborne@metro.us

Will Middlebrooks

Teams usually ship veterans out of town for young players, but Middlebrooks still seems destined to exit Boston.

The 25-year-old third baseman was the 51st-rated prospect in all of the majors by Baseball America in 2012. He's never lived up to it in Boston, but another team will likely give him a chance despite his .197 average and two home runs in 71 at-bats.

Middlebrooks also is developing a bad injury reputation. He's currently rehabbing from a broken finger, which came on a hit-by-pitch. But he's also dealt with a broken wrist in 2012 and a strained calf earlier in 2014.

JENNY DELL WILL NOT RETURN REGARDLESS,
RED SOX FANS.

Jake Peavy

Presuming he hasn't already been traded by the time you read this, Jake Peavy is probably the hottest commodity on the Red Sox.

The addition of Peavy to the Sox last July 30 gave the team a tremendous boost as they eventually went on to win the World Series. Peavy was a big part of that, especially with a good start against the Rays in the ALDS.

Now, another team would like to replicate that success. Peavy will most likely be traded to a National League team, with the Cardinals already reportedly in negotiations to bring in the 33-year-old righty.

PEAVY WAS 4-1 DOWN THE STRETCH FOR BOSTON IN 2013.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Peavy has struggled to a 1-7 record with a 4.64 ERA and just 84 strikeouts in 110 2/3 innings. The ERA would improve in the NL, and he's third-lowest in the AL with only 3.22 runs per game support, so the record doesn't matter.

But he has an abnormally high 42 walks after just 49 in an entire season (219 innings) in 2012.

But St. Louis is stocked with prospects the Sox would love and Boston prospect Rubby De La Rosa would get a permanent role in the rotation.

John Lackey

Veteran starting pitchers are always in high demand at the trade deadline. And ones with sterling postseason records are even more desired.

Lackey meets both of those criteria. Plus, he's due just $500,000 next season due to a clause in his contract which protected the Red Sox against an arm injury like the one that knocked him out of the entire 2012 season.

There are few teams that wouldn't sign up to get a guy who has a lifetime postseason record of 6-5 with a 3.03 ERA and two World Series rings. The latter came in a series in which Lackey threw 14 innings in three games (two starts) to the tune of a 2.57 ERA.

Lackey is 9-6 with a 3.84 ERA in 2014. He may be 35 years old, but he still appears to have something left in his right arm.

It will come down to what type of return the Red Sox can get. He's such an attractive commodity due to his 2015 contract that he should return fairly impressive prospects.

Whereas Lester is a free agent next season and Peavy is past his prime, and a free agent, the return should be higher on Lackey.

Koji Uehara

Red Sox fans may riot if the team trades the person they fell in love last season.

Uehara was the brightest spot in an altogether brilliant season in 2013. He finished with 21 saves, a 1.09 ERA and record-setting 0.56 WHIP as he took seventh in Cy Young voting.

But it wasn't a freak season based on 2014. He has a 1.30 ERA this year and could slot into the closer role for a number of clubs expecting to make the postseason. It wouldn't hurt to have the 2013 ALCS MVP in your pen. But as a free agent next season, he won't bring a huge prospect in return.

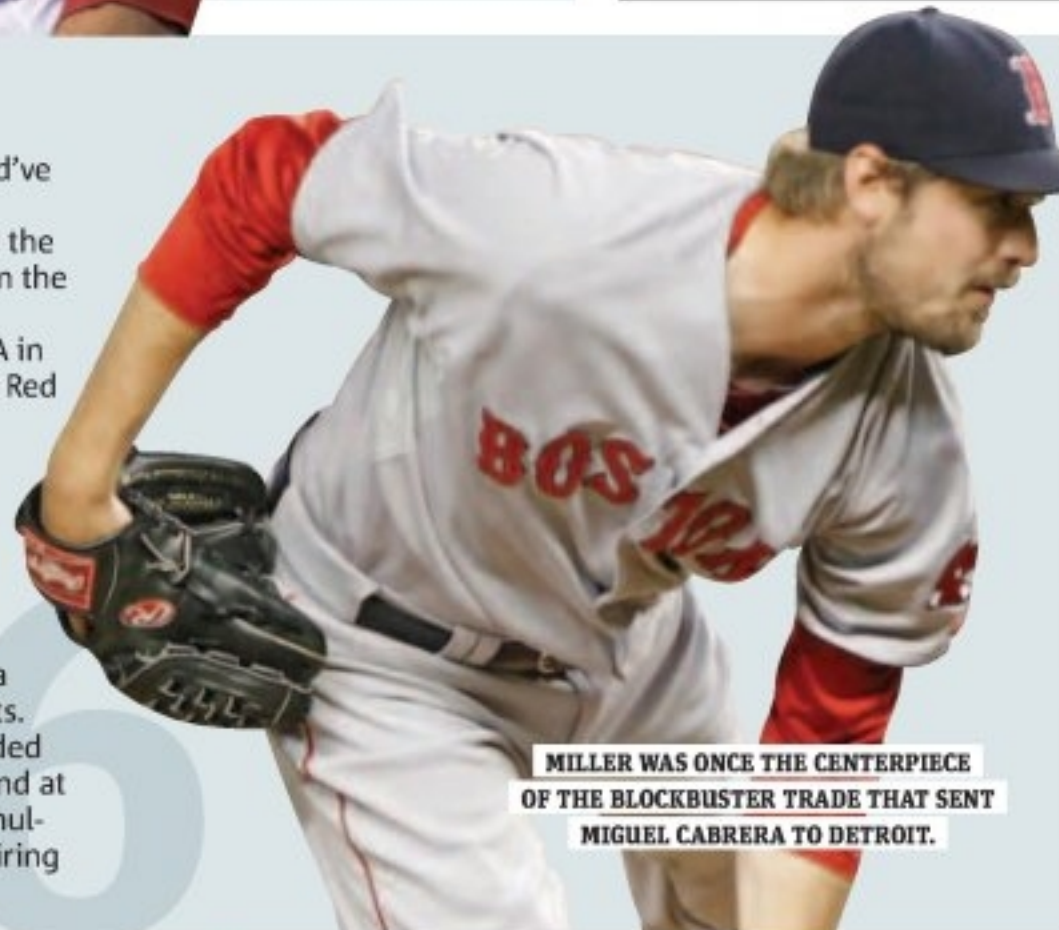

Andrew Miller

A few years ago it would've been unthinkable, but Andrew Miller might be the most-desirable player on the Red Sox roster.

Miller had a 5.95 ERA in his first season with the Red Sox mostly as a starter. Since his move to the pen, he's been much better — never more so than this season.

He has posted a career-best 2.34 ERA in 34 2/3 innings and has a dominating 57 strikeouts.

As always a left-handed reliever is in high demand at the trade deadline, so multiple teams will be inquiring about Miller.

MILLER WAS ONCE THE CENTERPIECE
OF THE BLOCKBUSTER TRADE THAT SENT
MIGUEL CABRERA TO DETROIT.

Burke Badenhop

Few positions are traded at the deadline more the relief pitchers.

Burke Badenhop is another arm in the Sox bullpen who could be on the move sooner rather than later. He has a 3.00 ERA in 45 innings. While Badenhop is a right-hander, and lefties are in more demand, left-handed hitters have a .254 batting average against him. He has actually been better against lefties than teammate Craig Breslow, a lefty, who might also be on the market.

Visit Metro.us to see where the Red Sox stand in our latest power rankings.

Jon Lester

If Jake Peavy is the most likely player on this list to be dealt before July 31, then Jon Lester is the least likely.

But that was not necessarily the case a few weeks ago. And there's no question Lester would fetch a fairly nice return for the Sox.

It all comes down to whether Boston believes they can re-sign the lefty starter once he becomes a free agent after the season. If they do — and to a reasonable deal — he will not be dealt. In fact, the only way he is traded away is likely if general manager Ben Cherington and company believe there is no way they re-sign him come the offseason.

It's the unlikelihood of that situation which makes Lester almost a given to return. And ESPN reported Wednesday the two sides were opening dialogue again over a contract extension.
